

Assignment 4

Name: Afifa Kaleem Butt
Subject: OB
Section: 8D

Sap ID :- 70128235

Submitted to: Ma'am ~~Aysha~~ Ayesha.

Q

Case 1: Effective Team work

Q₁: What do you think of the elements of successful teamwork Hackman has identified? Do you believe these elements are necessary for effective team performance?

Ans:- Hackman's elements - small and consistent team size, group based rewards, clear responsibilities and assertive leadership are foundational to effective teamwork. Yes I believe these elements are necessary but not always sufficient

Date: _____

Here's why :

- Small and consistent teams reduce coordination costs and promote familiarity and trust.
- Defined roles and responsibilities help prevent confusion and overlapping efforts.
- Group based rewards enhance collaboration over individual competition.
- Assertive leadership ensures alignment and direction especially in times of resistance.

Without these, even a team with high talent may flounder due to lack of structure or cohesion.

Q2: Can you think of other conditions necessary for teams to be effective?

Yes, Additional conditions I can think for teams to be effective are below :

- Psychological safety: members feel safe to share ideas without fear of ridicule.
- Clear and compelling goals: members aligned with organizations objectives.
- Effective communication: open channels for feedback and information sharing.

- Trust among members: builds over time and is key to collaboration.
- Access to resources and support: such as training, time and technology.

Q.3: Steps to Ensure Team Success for an International Marketing Campaign?

As a team leader, I would:

1. Clearly define the team mission and key deliverables.
2. Select team members with complementary skills (e.g. digital marketing, localization, research).
3. Hold a kick off meeting to establish goals, team norms and communication.
4. Assign individual roles linked to subtasks such as: Market research, Creative content development, localization and translation, media buying, campaign analytics.
5. Use collaboration tools (like Trello) to track progress and enhance accountability.
6. Schedule regular check-ins for performance review and adjustments.
7. Encourage open dialogue and feedback to address issues early.

Case 2: Executive Compensation and Equity

Q1: How does the executive compensation issue relate to equity theory?

Equity theory focuses on input to output balance. In this context:

- Executive compare their inputs (experience, skills, responsibilities, stress) to referent others executive in similar firms.
- If outcome pay are unequal compared to others with similar inputs, perception of inequity arise.

However, choosing who the referent others are can be manipulated leading to inflated compensation.

Q2: Procedural justice implications of executive pay policies?

Procedural justice relates to fairness in decision making processes. Problems in executive pay policies include:

- Lack of transparency in how compensation is determined.

Date: _____

• Conflict of interest when executives influence compensation committees.

• Inconsistent criteria applied across firms.

Many current practices violate procedural justice principle especially decisions appear biased or secretive.

Q3: Should the government control executive compensation? How do justice theory apply?

Yes, the government can play role by:

- Setting limits or caps
- Requiring disclosure of pay ratios to increase transparency.

Distributive justice: Questions whether the outcome is fair & relative to contribution and others compensation.

Procedural justice: Ensures the methods used to determine pay are transparent, unbiased and consistent.

Used together, these theories support regulation to prevent abuse and improve public trust.

Q4: Positive motivational consequences of tying compensation to firm performance

Yes if done correctly, performance based pay can:

- Motivate executives to focus on long term company success.
- Align their goals with shareholders and employees.
- Encourage strategic decision making to boost growth and profitability.

However, excessive focus on short term metrics, (e.g. stock price) can lead to risky behaviour or unethical practices.